Once upon a time, there was a little bug who didn't know what she was. So she asked the spiders.

"You can't be a spider. You have six legs, just like an insect!" said the spiders.

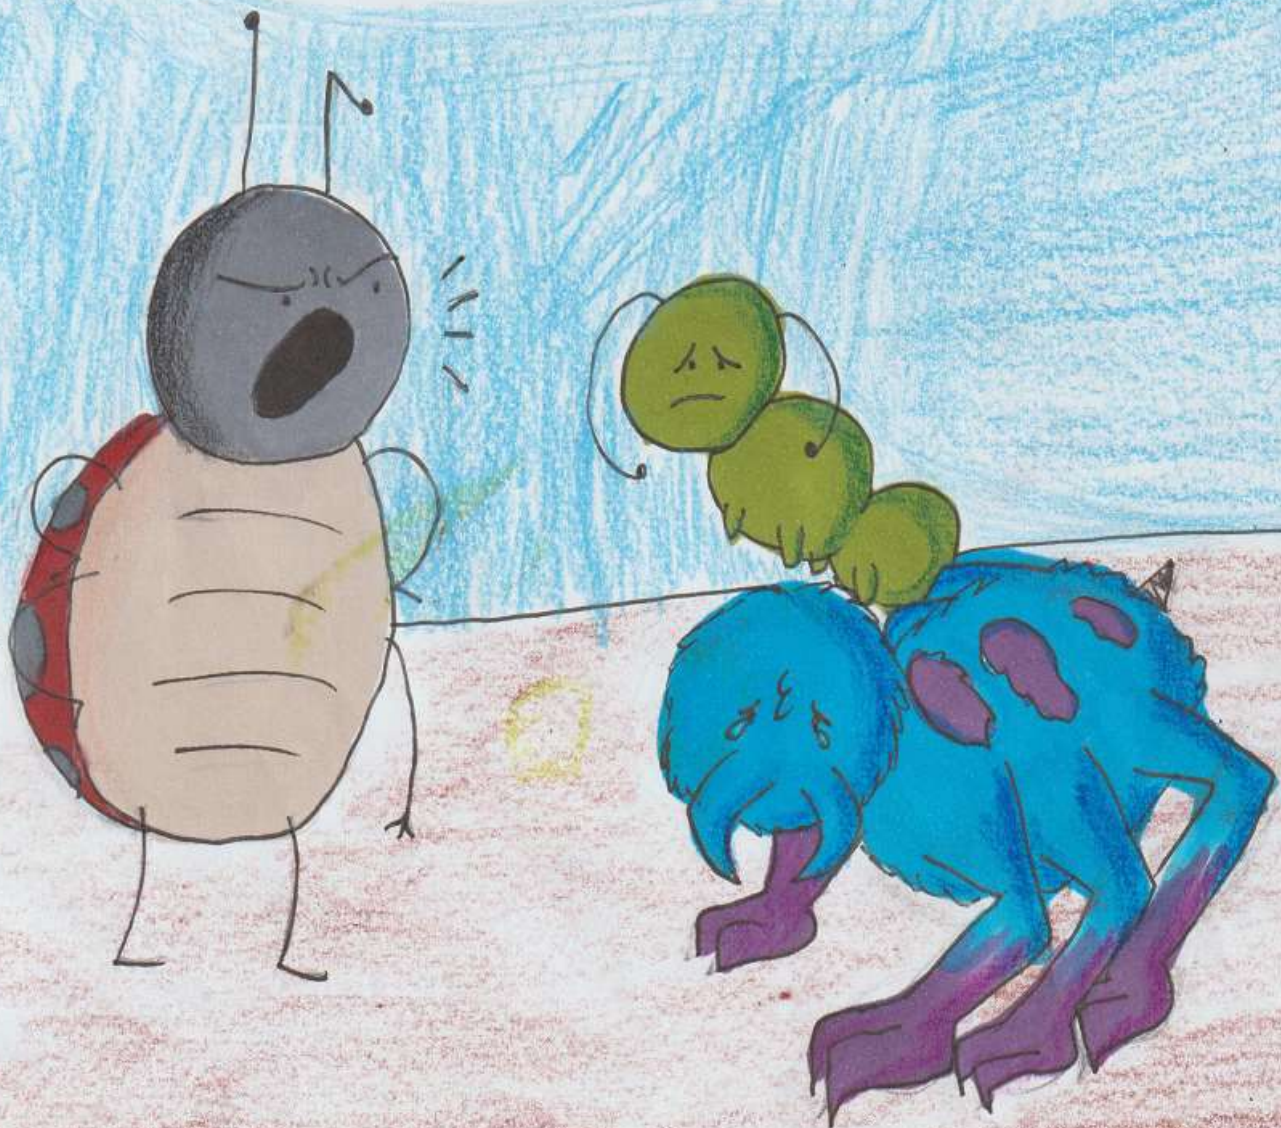

So she went with the insects. But before she went, she heard a little voice.

"Can I come with you? I have too many legs to be a spider..." said a caterpillar. And he joined in.

And so they went to ask the insects.

"There is no way you are an insect! Can't you see you're furry? You must be a mammal," the insects replied.

So off they went to search for the mammals.
But, before they went, they heard a voice.
"Can I come with you? My wing is broken. I can't fly!" a little wasp said. And she joined in.

Soon, they got to the mammals.

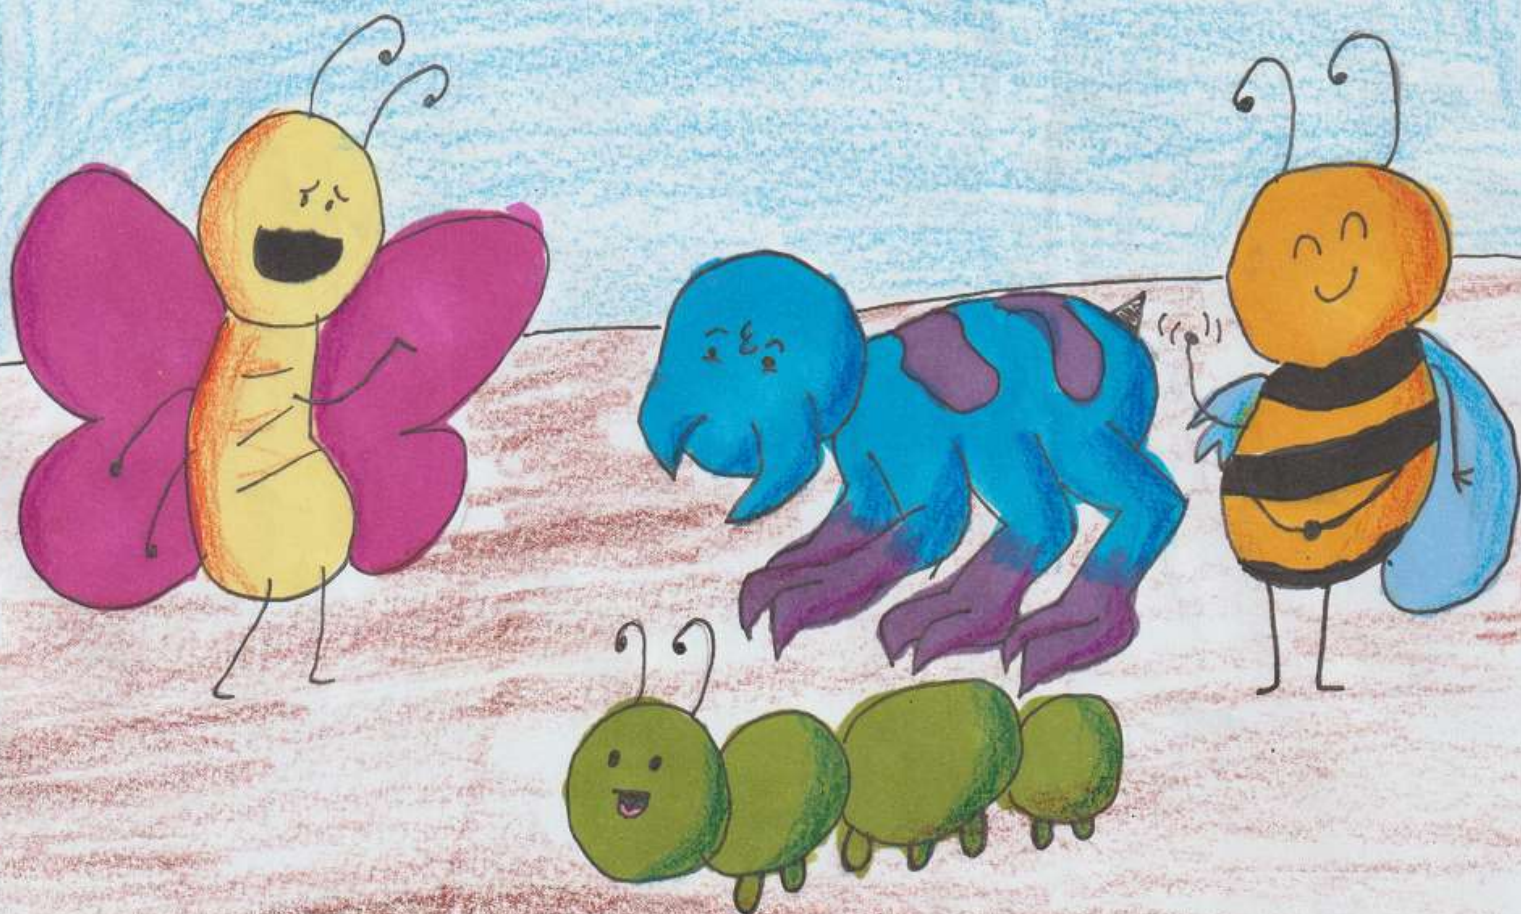

"You can't be a mammal," they laughed, "you are too small! You should go and ask the ants."

So they started to march to the ants. But, before they left, they heard a voice.

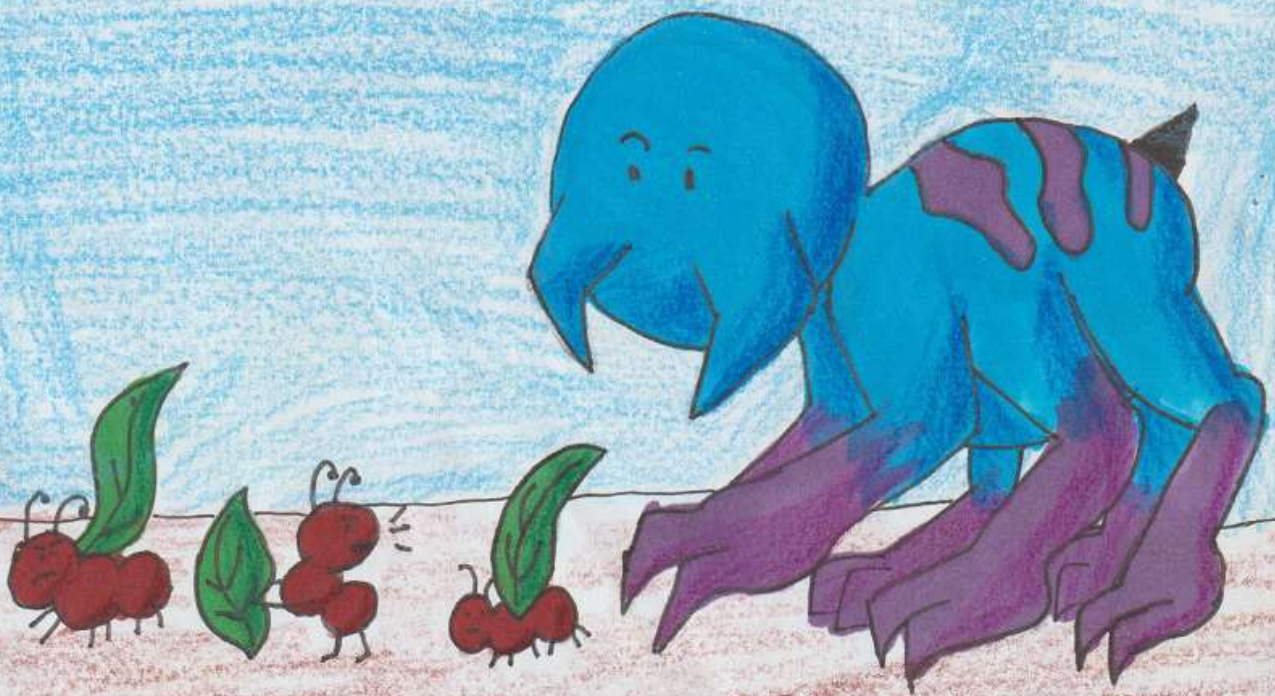

"Can I come with you? I only have five legs and they tell me I won't fit..." a beautiful butterfly said.

And she joined in.

After a while, they got to the ants.

"Are you serious? Look at you; you're too big for us!" the ants groaned.

So they went away. They heard a voice.
"I need a group because I can't walk fast enough.
Can I join you?" a slow beetle said.

"well..." the little bug started, "no one has accepted us. No one has listened to us. No one gave us a chance."

"Can't you see?" the wasp said, "That makes us..."

...the perfect group!

Have you ever felt like you don't fit in?
